It can be downloaded, cracked, full version.Q: How to make changes to File in RAM? I'm using python version 3.4.2 and I have a directory which contains a bunch of files (flist.zip). I'm trying to have python loop over these files to process them and then output the results to a file (output.zip). The way I'm doing it, however, is wrong, because it's trying to process each file from the root directory, instead of the directory containing the files that the following python code is in. So, it will output a new output.zip with all the files from the zip file instead of the content I've processed. I've added a print statement at the beginning of the code to try and see if the directory I'm using is correct, and it is. Here's the code: import glob import fnmatch import os import os.path print('Directory listing:', os.listdir(r'root\import\flist.zip')) #Since I'm working with Windows OS, I should remove the trailing.exe. fnmatch.filter(glob.glob(r'root\import\flist.zip'), '*.zip') #Separating the files with lines and processing the files for file in fnmatch.filter(glob.glob(r'root\import\flist.zip'), '*.zip'): #Removing the.exe before processing pth = os.path.split(file)[1] #Input File input_file = open(os.path.join(r'root\import' + file + ".pth"),'r') #Converting the lines to integers list_int = list(map(int, input_file.read().split
