At least it was hard to imagine until Chobi Labs just unveiled a new version of their previous entry into the One-Person-Robot simulator, only this time it's a girl named Wendy. She moves around like a Chibi-Robo! by utilizing their movements and body posture, grabbing things with her arms and hands, and even interacting with the environment in a way that makes the user feel like they're in a world made from the Chibi-Robo! franchise. What makes it different? The biggest new addition to the Chobi robot is that it can be gender customizable, making it much more customizable if you're trying to create something that looks like a certain character, like a Chibi-Robo! or a Chibi-Robo! from a different series. Just check the examples below. Some of the titles aren't exactly gender
