Somehow, after I got my own blog, it had about 3 views a day, maybe less. Not nearly the kind of traffic I was getting at the NAMBLA website. I kept getting thousands of views, so I wondered, "what is going on?" And then I wondered "Who can see my blog?" And then I thought "Who can see my blog?" So I started reading the comments at NAMBLA. It turns out, when you write for a hate group, you have to limit your comments to about 5 per day or your comment gets rejected and you have to start over. NAMBLA gets thousands of comments a day, so this has to be part of their system. And I read the comments over there. And they are, indeed, mostly dudes. Only about 5% of the comments are actually from women, and about 90% of those are the same 5 ladies who comment every day, and always have the same comments. It's just like they're a bot, on repeat. So I took a look at who those 5 ladies are, and one of them is NAMBLA's President, and another of them is a founder, and the other 3 are part-time staff. It turns out that NAMBLA has a PR department, and PR Department people (usually men) look at the comments and approve some of them. If a comment is edited enough, the PR folks might
