1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical amplifier, more particularly, to an optical amplifier that is equipped with a light-emitting diode (LED) and a photodetector, and can be a distributed amplification optical fiber amplifier. 2. Description of the Related Art There has been known an amplification method as a way of signal amplification to transmit light for communication purposes from a single mode fiber to a multimode fiber and to a multimode fiber to an optical fiber, i.e., a distributed amplification optical fiber amplifier in which a light-emitting diode (LED) is used as an optical source. The amplitude of the signal light modulated by the above mentioned method has the tendency of decreasing in accordance with the number of multimode fibers, since it is amplified in a high-gain mode in the distributed amplification optical fiber amplifier as mentioned above. To overcome the above described disadvantage and to amplify the signal light with a reduced distortion, an optical modulator is used in the prior art. Here, the optical modulator has the function of extracting the amplitude of the signal light in accordance with an input level of the light and outputting the extracted amplitude as an optical power level. However, the optical modulator is large-sized and high in cost. Accordingly, the optical modulator cannot be installed in a communication terminal such as an optical amplifier in an e79caf774b
