Stem Cell Mom Had Husband Doubts The story that a Florida mother of a child born using her own stem cells couldn't care less that her husband is a physician. According to WKMG, Bev Owens says her husband was "like a parent" to their child. But when they found out she was pregnant, he told her, "it can't be a miracle baby because doctors know how babies are made." WKMG reports that since then, the Owens' are "on their own path of discovery," as they start the long process of having a second child. "I wasn't going to try for two, but now we're so excited. That's kind of where we're at," Bev said. How to be a better leader: You cannot, you must (2009) - rblion ====== solipsist This makes me sad. I am always amused to see people write off other peoples' failure to innovate. It makes me wonder how many "better" ideas are lost to the world because of this mentality. If you're not innovative and you're going to be jobless because of it, you are better off not trying anything. It's just common sense. ~~~ sosuke It does but what a strange place to find it. I can only hope there are more "better" ideas which he or

What's new in Mad Devils:

The Mad Dogs (official home of "The Mac Mall"; The TriState-Tri County Storm in NBT) are a semi-pro professional American football team, that are members of the Atlantic Scholastic Football League (ASFL). In 2004, the ASFL was reorganized and became a semi-pro league. The team is currently a member of the Atlantic Division of the ASFL. The team currently plays its home games at the Wharton Center in Carlstadt, New Jersey. Former players include Cris Collinsworth, David Rome, Ben Roethlisberger, Cliff Stoudt, and Tanner Swanson. The current management of the team was founded by a group of loyal Mad Dogs fans in 1985. The owners are Patrick and Joann MacDermid. The current head coach is Frank Szendrey. The team is coached by Frank Szendrey. History Early years 1963 saw the forming of a team known as "The New Jersey Internationals" in the World Football League, a league that was intended to be a major rival to the established National Football League. The team was coached by Joe Bugel and featured future Heisman Trophy winner Terry Bradshaw. In the team's inaugural season the Internationals went 5-4-1 and won the championship game handily against the Buffalo Bills, who featured Ernie Davis and O.J. Simpson. In the days of the WFL, attendance at most of the team's games was low—they drew around 4,000 spectators on some occasions. Consequently, in the spring of 1964 the owners sold the team (which by that point was facing an uncertain future) to James Bennett, a Long Island businessman who renamed the team the New York Jets. 1966 saw the demise of the WFL with their bankruptcy and the collapse of the league. What is commonly considered the birth of Mad Dogs Football can be traced to 1966, when Curtis Thompson organized a semi-pro team in the Greater New York Football Conference. The New York Jets were part of this group as well as the New York Titans, and later their adult counterparts, the New York Giants. Though not the first such incarnation of a semi-pro team in the New York Jets were part of this group as well
