Autodesk CAD software allows the exchange of drawings among a company's project team through the use of the DWG file format. DWG files can be viewed in the Autodesk CAD software, and can be manipulated by the software and printed. Autodesk has partnered with other software developers to make the process easier. The company has also released Autodesk Livelink which enables users to access drawings from anywhere on the internet, regardless of the software installed on the user's computer. AutoCAD also supports the Portable Document Format (PDF) for conversion of drawings from the native file format.
