A: So, in the above code you are not suppose to use the `GetDeviceName()` API, that was done in the setup code. In fact, you're more or less calling `getDeviceName()` in your code, which is why you're getting the exception. As an alternative, you can use the function `Devmode(0, 0, "BT")` in the setup code. That will return a `DeviceName` that works.

`Devmode(0, 0, "BT")` in setup code:
Private Sub Setup_Load(sender As Object, e As EventArgs) Handles MyBase.Load
If the Setup VBA debugger is not present then start it.
If Not DirectCast(sender, Control).Refresh() Then DirectCast(sender,

Control).Invoke(New MethodInvoker(AddressOf Setup_Refresh)) End If End Sub
GetDeviceName(): Private Function
GetDeviceName() As String Dim
deviceString As String = "Null" Dim deviceName As String = "" Try deviceName =
OpenBiosSetup.Devmode(0, 0, "BT")
deviceString = deviceName
OpenBiosSetup.Devmode(0, 0, "BT")
Catch ex As Exception deviceString
= "" Debug.Print(ex.Message) End
Try Return deviceString End

Function Q: Does "at last" mean "at the last" or "at the end"? In Oxford dictionary, the first meaning of at last is: at the last or at the end. But the last meaning of at last is at last.

I couldn't understand which meaning is right. A: Context is everything. Sometimes "at last" can mean "at the end" and sometimes it can mean "at the last". In the sentence "Since I had a lot of work to do I think I will write "at last" the final chapter." The sentence "We have finally written the final chapter" does not mean "at the last".

This software is a video codec with special features for BBC Television, and some others. It seems that it does not work on any Vista (and it definitely does not work on Win7) system where it is not installed on the "C:\Program Files\Mendoza Studios" folder. So if you are a Vista user who downloaded it, you will have to follow the instructions to install it in the correct place. But in any case the software works on any Windows operating system, so if it does not work for you, try a different option. The program is quite simple to use. The basic idea is that you choose the video file, and after selecting a profile for the audio, you choose if you want to get the file in standard dither (which is the default) or 4-bit dither (which has some similarities with the Maximum Raw Compression MPEG2 video, but it is not the same as it does not match the maximum compression level, so you get more detail with less compression). Then click on "Format" to select the desired format. For video you can choose from MPEG-2 and H.264 depending on your needs, and for audio MPEG-2 and AC-3 (192 Kbps, 48 KHz or 32 KHz, stereo or surround). The file will be downloaded, and then you can open it in any video editor software (you need to add a codec to it, of course) or you can open it directly from the download manager. The Nero 9
