has passed away after a battle with cancer. He started the company in 1996 and it is now headquartered in San Francisco. He was also an entrepreneur who recognized the popularization of digital cameras would eventually result in the proliferation of online content and services. That is why in 1999 he founded Apple, the world's first online store that offered digital images. The company offers software as a service and hardware solutions for digital imaging and multimedia. Its widely accepted as the industry standard in digital camera hardware, providing an extensive range of digital camera models from traditional DSLR cameras to their entry level DSLRs and mirrorless cameras. These products are particularly easy to work with for hobbyists and amateurs because of their relatively low cost and with continual improvements their cost is constantly coming down. Apple is also known for its highly refined and intuitive macOS and iOS operating systems as well as its successful mobile devices; among which the iPhone and iPad are the most popular consumer electronic products. Because of these products it has earned revenues to surpass $200 billion annually. iStock In February of 2005, Apple entered the software arena with the release of the iPod, an MP3 player that offered hands-free listening. The company continued to innovate with the release of iOS, the software powering the iPod that enabled any phone to now function as a music player, alarm clock, voice recorder, and calendar. While the iPod was successful, it required third-party developers to put their own applications on the device, and the success of the App Store was due to the success of the iPhone, which started out as a "contacts and iPod" device with the addition of internet browsing, email, a messaging application, and a camera. It was until the iPhone 5s that Apple's entry to the smartphone market was successful. This was thanks to the addition of a faster processor, a new operating system, iOS 7, and a dual camera system. While the iPhone has been successful, it is because of the success of the iPad that Apple is one of the most prominent technology companies in the world. The iPad's feature set has been compared to that of a laptop computer, and while it lacks a full keyboard, it does offer a stylus and the ability to run most apps that would be available on a laptop or desktop computer. Tech Radar While Apple is best known for its consumer electronics products, the company is also a major producer of personal computers. The original Macintosh was the first commercial desktop computer to implement the graphical user interface. The company's first attempt at e79caf774b
