What Can You Do with RollerCoaster Tycoon Classic Mac?Regulation of steroid 5 alpha-reductase I activity in mouse epiphyseal chondrocytes: hormonal regulation by growth and differentiation. We demonstrate here that steroid 5 alpha-reductase type I (5 alpha-R-I) in the epiphyseal cartilage of neonatal mice is regulated by growth and differentiation. Although 5 alpha-R-I mRNA in the epiphyses is not detected until after birth, the enzyme activity is already present at the early stage of growth. 5 alpha-R-I activity in the epiphysis is detected in the central proliferative region during growth, and the activity increases with growth in parallel with an increased concentration of 5 alpha-dihydrotestosterone (DHT) and the proliferation of chondrocytes. On the other hand, 5 alpha-R-I activity in the epiphyseal cartilage is markedly reduced in epiphyseal chondrocytes undergoing terminal differentiation. In addition, we examined the effect of insulin and dexamethasone on 5 alpha-R-I activity in the epiphyseal cartilage. Insulin treatment increases 5 alpha-R-I activity in the epiphyses, whereas dexamethasone decreases 5 alpha-R-I activity in the epiphysis. These results suggest that 5 alpha-R-I activity is regulated by hormones, and that the epiphysis is a specific target organ for the action of steroids on cartilage metabolism.
