Sjögren's syndrome in children: a case report. The diagnosis of Sjögren's syndrome (SS) has changed dramatically over the past few decades. This paper reports the third case of pediatric SS. The patient was a 7-year-old girl who complained of chronic dry eyes and dry mouth, facial erythema, and xerostomia. Salivary gland biopsy showed typical findings for SS. Our patient presented with the major symptoms and signs of SS. However, the exact diagnosis was delayed until the age of 7 because of the rarity of pediatric SS. The patient received symptomatic management. Although SS is commonly associated with the deposition of monoclonal antibodies in the sal
