Comcast, the nation's largest cable company, is planning to offer a "streaming option" for Apple TV, multiple media reports say. It's unclear, however, whether it will be a full-blown service or something akin to what the cable giant already offers for Internet-connected TVs, including video-on-demand. The Wall Street Journal, citing an anonymous source, says the new service will launch in the fourth quarter of this year. The report notes that some streaming services for Apple TV, including Netflix, require a cable subscription. Comcast is offering the ability to rent movies and TV shows to Apple TV users in the second half of this year, sources told the Journal. Comcast is the largest pay TV provider in the U.S. It operates in
