As the U.S. economy reels from the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression, some economists say nearly every sector of the country is feeling the effects of the downturn. It's the wrong time, they say, for a government spending push that increases the national debt. Consider the White House-backed $787 billion bailout that Congress approved on Friday to help stabilize the beleaguered economy, the largest deficit-reduction plan passed in decades. The bill includes nearly $14 billion in aid to New York and New Jersey to repair the damage wrought by Hurricane Sandy and a $125 billion bailout of banks. But for the rest of the U.S., says Harvard University's Greg Mankiw, the legislation is a drop in the bucket. "Let's say you could take out of this $17.7 trillion a $4 trillion chunk and put it into the economy. The economy would explode with it,” Mr. Mankiw said in 79a2804d6b
