John McCain John Sidney McCain Analysis: Biden victory, Democratic sweep would bring biggest boost to economy The Memo: Trump's strengths complicate election picture Mark Kelly: Arizona Senate race winner should be sworn in 'promptly' MORE (R-Ariz.) and GOP presidential nominee Mitt Romney aggressively tore into President Obama on Monday over comments he made at the White House Correspondents Dinner on Saturday night, accusing the administration of waging a war on conservatives and demanding an apology from the president.

ADVERTISEMENT "This is a war on conservatism," McCain said, pointing to the administration's delay in fighting the war in Afghanistan in the opening days of the presidential campaign and the Justice Department's lawsuit against Arizona's controversial immigration law as examples. "He's not even above race baiting," McCain said, an apparent reference to Obama's joke about running over a protester with his car at the Correspondents Dinner. McCain said the president's comments were a "stain" on the White House and questioned whether the press corps will continue to hold the president in such high regard. "What are you going to do? Are you going to still treat him like this? And if you do, let me know," McCain said. "I'll go to the press." At the same time, Romney said Obama's presidency has been filled with "divisiveness and attacks on 'the ordinary citizen.'" "You know, I don't want to be too much like the president or his team, but all he's done is divide us," Romney said. "And he's been proud to do that, and he's been proud to have divided us along partisan lines." He said Obama's presidency will be remembered as "a war on middle-income Americans, a war on the job creators and this will stand as a marker in the history of the United States of America." The Republican candidate also went after the president's record on the economy, questioning his plans for increased government spending, his failure to bring down the unemployment rate and the debt and his response to the BP oil disaster
