deal .Caloric restriction results in upregulation of antioxidant proteins, activation of insulin-receptor substrate-1 and reduced oxidative stress. A study of caloric restriction has provided information on the tissue-specific effects of reduced diet. Dietary restriction (DR) is also associated with reduced oxidative stress and improved health. The present study was carried out to investigate the effects of

DR on expression of antioxidant proteins, activation of insulin receptor substrate-1 (IRS-1) and cellular damage in rat liver. Male albino rats were divided into four groups; on a diet containing either 40, 80, 120, or 180 kcal/day (low-protein diet (LPD), control diet (CD), regular diet (RD)), and were fed for 4 months. Compared with those fed CD, LPD fed rats had a reduced body weight but increased relative liver weight. Dietary restriction caused upregulation of proteins such as heme oxygenase-1 (HO-1), superoxide dismutase (SOD), and peroxiredoxin-4 (PRx-4) as well as a reduction in thiobarbituric acid-reactive substances (TBARS) and oxidative DNA damage. Activation of IRS-1 and the phosphorylation of Akt, as well as a reduction in tissue lipids and cholesterol were observed in livers of LPD fed rats. In conclusion, rats fed LPD were protected against the oxidative damage and the altered metabolic profiles and the protection appeared to be associated with increased expression of antioxidant proteins and enhanced activation of IRS-1, resulting in upregulation of nuclear factor-kappa B (NFkappaB). These data provide evidence for the combined effects of DR on oxidative
