Over the last couple of years, I've become an Apple devotee, after initial hesitation, after "trying" other systems and brands of computers. Not only was I excited to find a computer that really did everything I need it to, but I soon realized that I could take almost all of my work with me everywhere, and that it was all prepared the way I like it to be. Color accuracy is improved thanks to the engine underlying the Color Drop feature, and even the photo filter and lens correction is cleaner and faster. Several new image-processing algorithms are being inserted into the developed applications, making the whole package faster and even suggesting better edits. And don't forget that these are the top features available to Windows users. It's not surprising that Photoshop 18.2 brings over the new features and improvements from Photoshop 2021 for Windows. The new version is an absolute essential for users - I have had to up-grade it just to use some of its new features. You can drag and drop images all over the place in Compatibility view, resulting in strange side effects, such as the CYMK color profile information disappearing. You also have more control over the quality setting of a compressed output file, which will come in handy if you want to save a large file from Photoshop to a shared network drive. You can also now show thumbnails of files in the Create Info panel, a feature I didn't know existed before. Most of these changes are for even more convenience in using the program, and with so much to do in Photoshop, who would ever want to switch to Windows Photo Viewer?
